Huge Throng in May Day Demonstration in Berlin

An immense throng, estimated at over 1,000,000 people, gathered in Berlin on May Day and was addressed by fiery orators whose main theme, apart from the grievances of labor against the capitalists, was a protest against the French occupation of the Ruhr. Trouble had been feared and the police were on the alert, but apart from some minor disorders the day passed without serious incidents. There were rival processions of the Nationalists and Communists, and this led to some individual affrays that ended, however, without casualties.

(Wide World Photos.)

EXCEPT for a few minor incidents, May Day was quieter in Berlin than had been expected. There were the usual labor meetings and vast throngs assembled in the Lustgarten opposite the ex-Kaiser's castle, where labor leaders made speeches to the effect that though the hatchet had been temporarily buried between the masses and the capitalists, it was necessary to continue the fight against the occupying forces in the Ruhr district in order to preserve the integrity of Germany, which was absolutely necessary, they alleged, if the German laboring masses were not to die of starvation.

As a procession of Communists passed along Unter den Linden they were greeted by the strains of "Deutschland Ueber Alles," which is now a republican hymn, sung by a number of Nationalist students, who kept behind the high iron railing that enclosed the university premises. The Communists, replying with the international labor hymn, made a rush for the railing, but, finding it too stout an obstacle, contented themselves with exchanging defiance with the students through the bars.

When the Communist procession later reached Charlottenburg it encountered a bridal couple in a state coach en route to a wedding feast. The carriage was promptly stopped until the procession passed, against which the monocled new husband protested in language borrowed from the dictionary of pre-war aristocracy. He was then lifted from the side of his screaming young wife and received a severe thrashing.

In Bavaria, also, despite an atmosphere of severe tension between the Socialists and Hitler's Fascists, May Day celebrations passed without the widely feared collision.

MID-WEEK PICTORIAL, Vol. XVII., No. 13, May 24, 1923. An illustrated weekly published by The New York Times Company, Times Square, New York. Subscription rate, $5.00 a year. (Canada, $6.00 a year.) Copyright, 1923, by The New York Times Company. Entered as second-class matter, March 8, 1918, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the act of March 3, 1879, and with the Post Office Department of Canada as second-class matter.

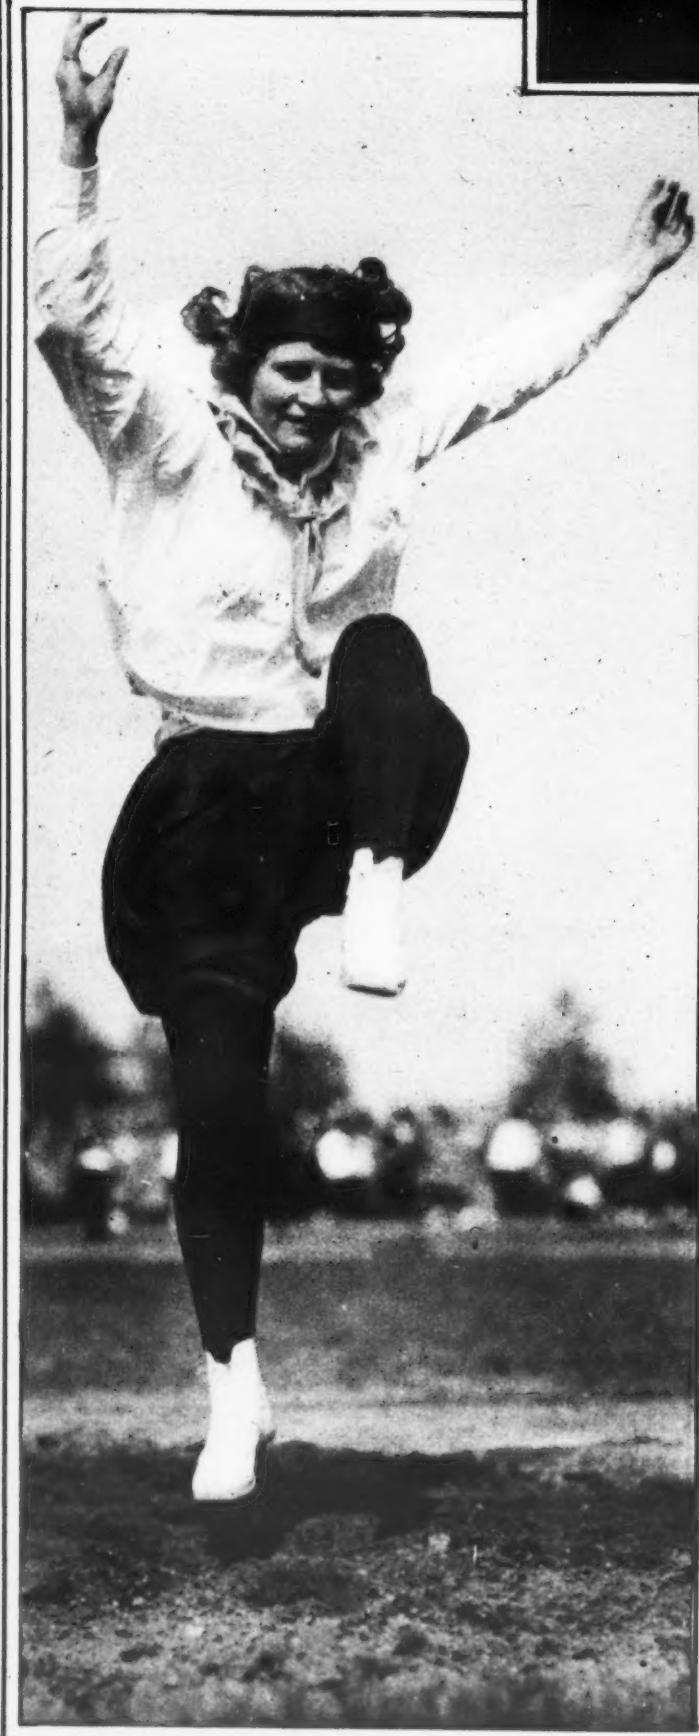

JUDGE CHARLES L. BARTLETT of Detroit is a thorough believer in the desirability of bringing home to reckless motorists the iniquity of their ruthlessness by showing them some of its concrete results. Some time ago he had men who were charged with speeding taken to the morgue and hospitals in which were lying the dead and injured victims of speeding auto drivers. Recently he went a step further and had little children in all stages of recovery from auto injuries brought into the court room, where they sat in the jury box while the Judge passed sentence on 180 men who had been brought before him charged with exceeding the speed limit or driving cars while drunk. How pressing is the need for more drastic methods is shown by the fact that in the month of April 89 were killed and 2,272 injured by autos in New York City alone. Add to these figures the results of auto accidents in the rest of the country and the result become appalling. Some of the accidents of course were due to the carelessness of pedestrians themselves, but when these are subtracted from the total a terrible residue remains of deaths and injuries caused by the "speed maniacs" who sat in the driver's seat.

ALASKA REINDEER FARM

One of the largest reindeer farms in the world and certainly the largest on this hemisphere is that owned and operated by the Lomen Brothers of Nome, Alaska. They are breeding the animals by the thousands, and expect to make the enterprise a lucrative one. One of the herds is here seen on the shores of a stream that runs through the farm.

REINDEER MEAT

Not many people have tasted reindeer meat, but those who have declare it to be a delicacy worthy of the gratitude of a connoisseur. It is nutritious, savory, tender and succulent. It may become a more common article of food if the predictions of experts are justified that in a short time there will be a meat scarcity. In that event Alaska may be looked to as a new source of supply. The reindeer farm there located, a section of which is presented on these pages, has an extent of 600,000 acres and is capable of maintaining huge herds. The animals are easily and cheaply raised, as there is abundant pasture and the reindeer need no shelter the year round.

Giant New York Radio Station

WHAT is probably the greatest broadcasting station in the world is the one whose various functions are represented on this page, established by the Radio Corporation of America on top of Aeolian Hall, Forty-second Street, New York City. This super-station, which supersedes WJZ in Newark, will transmit two broadcasting programs simultaneously at different wave lengths—455 meters for WJZ and 405 meters for WJY—one of classical music and the other of popular airs, dance music and lectures. The main recital hall of Aeolian Hall has been connected with a switchboard in the station, thus providing for broadcasting of the expensive recitals and concerts by world-famous artists which are held there frequently.

HUGE APPARATUS

Monster equipment, said to be the most delicate and powerful in the world, that will be used in the new broadcasting station on top of Aeolian Hall in New York City. Lieutenant Governor Fuller of Massachusetts, accompanied by thirty-nine Mayors of cities in that State, with their wives, called at the White House to pay their respects May 9 and were later photographed with their host on the White House lawn.
(© Harris & Ewing.)

PROBABLY the most photographed man in the country is President Harding. This is not because of any special liking for the limelight, for the President is the most modest and unassuming of men. But lack of privacy is one of the penalties that accompany high office, and the President has to pay that penalty far more often than he desires. Scarcely a week goes by without some delegation calling at the White House, and it has become a matter of course that following the visit the party should adjourn to the lawn and have a photograph taken. This, however, has its compensations for the public, which always views with interest the President himself, and which is thereby enabled to become acquainted also with the faces of people who are prominent in their special spheres, as in the case of the Mayors of Massachusetts cities presented on this page.

YOUTHFUL SINGER

Another melodious voice will be added to the cast of the Metropolitan Opera House this coming Fall, when Miss Nanette Guilford, a beautiful New York girl, will make her début. She is extremely young, only 18, and is said to be the youngest girl with one exception that has ever been offered a contract with the celebrated institution. Two years ago her voice was declared to have operatic possibilities, and in the interim it has developed so fully in accordance with its earlier promise that she has realized the goal of every singer's ambition.

BALZAC'S DESCENDANT

Interest was added to the depositing of a wreath on the statue of Lafayette in Union Square, New York, recently by the fact that the young and pretty woman who paid the tribute was a lineal descendant of Honoré de Balzac, the most celebrated of French novelists, and some would even claim the greatest novelist of all time. Balzac was a native of Tours and was born in 1799, at the time that the turbulence provoked by the French Revolution was beginning to subside and when the young Napoleon was beginning to "bestride the narrow world like a Colossus." His early life was that of many young writers, one of hardship, penury and disappointment, and it was not until he was 30 that success came to him with the publication of "The Last Chouans." From that time his star began to rise, and before many years had passed he was acclaimed as a genius. His facility and his industry were amazing, and he continued to send out an enormous number of novels, many of them historical, while others were studies of contemporary life and manners. Later he collected many of these and wove them into his "Comédie Humaine," in which he described with wonderful insight and perception the manifold aspects of human life. He is the father of the realistic school of fiction and the forerunner of the novelist of character analysis and portrayal. While at times gross and brutal, he was so keen, so unsparing, so close an observer than his portrayals had to be accepted as a vivid and truthful setting forth of life, in its shadows as well as its lights, its baseness as well as its nobility. He died at the comparatively early age of 51, at the very height of his power and fame.

ONE more illustration of the warm friendship that exists between the greatest republic of the Old World and the greatest republic of the New is furnished by the trip abroad that will be made by gold star mothers acting as official representatives of the Veterans of Foreign Wars to lay a wreath of poppies on the tomb of the Unknown French Soldier on Memorial Day. A replica of the wreath goes to Denmark for the dedication of the national monument raised by the Danish people for their kinsmen who fell in the World War.

THE present Spring has been one of the coldest that can be recalled by the well-known "oldest inhabitant." What the reason may be has not been definitely ascertained, although various theories more or less plausible have been hazarded by meteorologists. While abnormally cool weather has prevailed in the East, the West has been visited by terrific blizzards. That fleets of steamers should be icebound in Lake Superior at a date as late as May 4 is a fact worthy of more than passing notice.

JUDGE JOHN C. KNOX in the United States District Court May 9 held void those provisions of the Volstead law which limit the amount of liquor a physician may prescribe for a patient to one pint in ten days. He declared in effect that it was for the attending physician, not Congress, to decide how much alcohol was needed as a medicine by a given patient in a given case.

The decision of Judge Knox was handed down in an action brought against Government officials by Dr. Samuel W. Lambert, Dean Emeritus of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University, on behalf of that part of the medical profession which regards alcohol as a valuable therapeutic agent. Judge Knox granted an injunction, pendente lite, restraining Edward C. Yellowley, who was Acting children proved exceedingly gay, picturesque and successful. Business was exceptionally good, the buying spirit was in the air and a large sum was realized for the benefit of the pathetic little charges of the city. All the booths, which were served by people prominent in society, did well financially. At the cake booth, which was supplied by the best cake bakeries and smart restaurants in New York City as well as by the twenty-five members of the committee, who brought in home-made cake daily, there was such a demand that by the end of each afternoon every cake was gone. Animals were among the most popular sellers and the animal booth turned in somewhere around $1,000 a day. The stock was rapidly depleted, getting down finally to dogs, maltese kittens and "plain" kittens. One of the decorative features of the fair was the Caruso Rhadames suit at the Oriental booth, on which fifty-cent chances were selling. Balancing the suit at the other end of the booth was a supposititious mummy, over which was an original verse which stated that "King Tut, although a nut, was a friend of this old fellow." It was not an expensive fair to attend, and the warm, generous spirit that pervaded everything made up for the chill of out-of-doors

CHILDREN FROM RUHR DISTRICT REACHING BERLIN
Owing either to the voluntary withdrawal of Germans from the Ruhr or their expulsion because of the passive resistance initiated by the German Government, arrangements have been made in Berlin to take care of several thousand of the children from the district, some of whom are here seen just after leaving the railroad train.

Phases of Court and Social Life in Far Away Annam

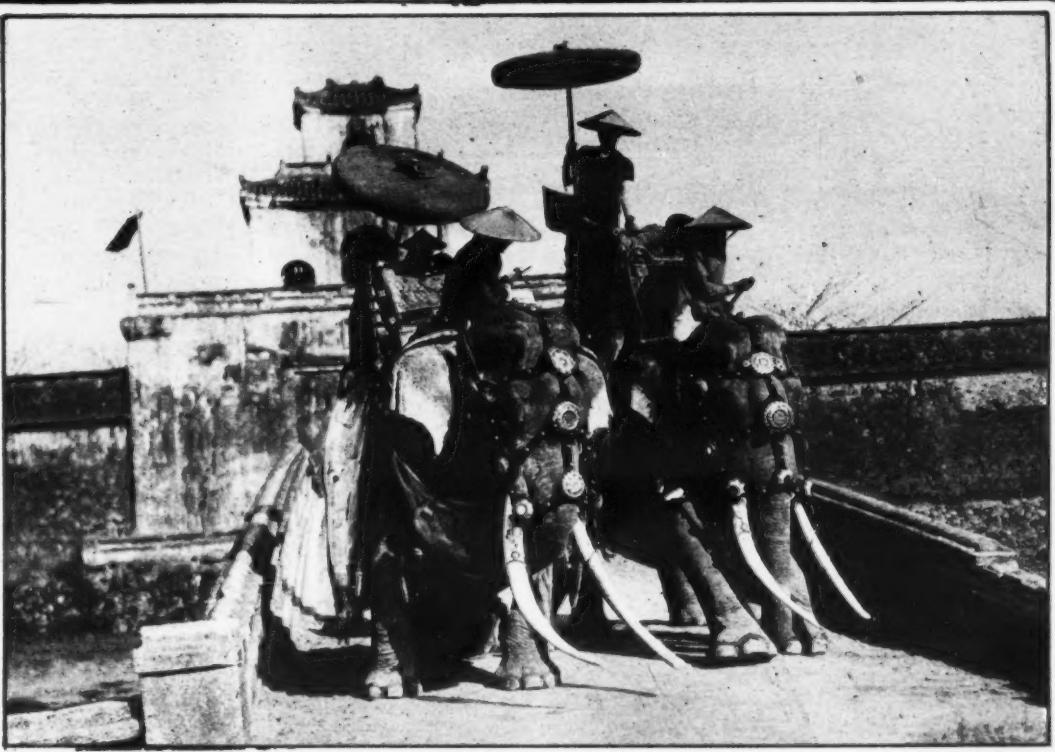

ANNAMESE CHILDREN LEARNING TO WALK

Little ones in Annam, when they first show an inclination to walk, are enveloped in these basket-like contrivances that prevent them from falling. Thus they gain confidence and are soon able to dispense with them altogether.

PECULIAR interest attaches to these pictures of Annam because they are among the first that have been permitted to be taken in that remote kingdom, which is more exclusive in its attitude toward foreigners than almost any other Asiatic country. Annam comprises Tonquin on the north and Cochin-China and Chiampa on the south. It lies on the east side of the Indo-Chinese Peninsula and is about 800 miles long, with a breadth varying from 100 to 400 miles. It was formerly a province of China, but won its independence in 1428. It is a fertile agricultural country and has an extensive import and export trade. The religion of the majority is Buddhist, but the educated classes hold the doctrine of Confucius. There are 420,000 Roman Catholics in the kingdom. On the plea of protecting native Christians the French Government gradually gained such a hold on the country that in 1884 Annam became a French protectorate.

SACRED ELEPHANTS BEING TAUGHT TO SALAAM TO THE EMPEROR

The Emperor of Annam has as his other title the Son of Heaven, and even the sacred elephants when they come into his august presence have to bow in reverence.

ONE of the greatest aviation feats of recent years was that which was completed on May 3, when the great army monoplane T-2, piloted by Lieutenant Oakley G. Kelly and Lieutenant John A. Macready, landed at San Diego, Cal., 26 hours 50 minutes 38 2-5 seconds from the time it had left Hempstead, L. I., on the day before.

The distance covered is estimated at more than 2,700 miles, a new non-stop flight record and about 1,000 miles longer than Captain Alcock's and Lieutenant Brown's flight across the Atlantic in 1919. A speed of more than 100 miles an hour was maintained in this first non-stop transcontinental flight.

As the big plane landed at Rockwell Field, within a stone's throw of the Pacific Ocean, the fliers were greeted by Major Henry H. Arnold, who exclaimed: "The impossible has happened!" But it was not impossible, after all, as was told by the wide grin on Lieutenant Kelly's face, who was the first to leap from the machine

ELKS LAY CORNER-STONE

The Grand Exalted Ruler of the Elks, James Elgar Masters, is here seen as he wielded the trowel in laying the cornerstone of the new home for the Elks at Broad and Wood Streets, Philadelphia, May 12. Thousands of members of the order were present at the ceremony. Copies of all the Philadelphia papers of that day's date, pictures of all high officials and copies of contracts and bonds were sealed away in an inner compartment of the cornerstone, to remain there undisturbed for perhaps a century or more.

which had carried the two men from ocean to ocean. It was told also by a grin equally broad on the face of Lieutenant Macready, who was at the wheel and had to wait a few seconds longer than his companion in leaping to Californian soil again.

The plane carried copies of The New York Times of May 2, and for the first time in history a newspaper printed in New York on one day was read in California on the next.

AMBASSADORS RETURN

Three United States Ambassadors arrived May 11 from London, Berlin and Madrid, accompanied by their families, on the George Washington of the United States Lines. They will spend a few days in New York or at their homes before proceeding to Washington to report to the State Department. When they met reporters on the ship Colonel George Harvey, Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, took a seat at the middle of the table, with Clarence E. Woods, former Minister to Spain and newly appointed Ambassador to Japan, on his right, and Alanson B. Houghton, Ambassador to Germany, on his left.

Colonel Harvey, who appeared in much better health than when he was here last Winter on a special mission for the Government, made it clear that he had no intention of retiring from his post until his time expired and said that he had come home on his first leave of absence in two years. His visit here last Winter was described by the Ambassador as "business."

When asked as to the criticisms made here that he was too British and ought to be recalled, Colonel Harvey said: "I may be pro-British, but I am not a damn fool. The relations between the two countries have never been better than they are today."

IT FOOLED BARNUM

This queer object, hewn from a log, fitted with cow's horns, covered with calf's hide and armed with iron claws, proved a great hoax in Northern Wisconsin many years ago. It had wires attached to it which gave it a life-like movement. It was said that P. T. Barnum once offered a large sum for it.

After reporting to Washington, each will take a short vacation prior to resuming their duties.

63,000 SEE BOXING BOUTS

Despite the threatening weather, over 63,000 people crowded the new Yankee Stadium, New York, on May 12, where the greatest number of important heavyweight boxing bouts took place that have ever occurred in this country. Despite the immense throngs, there was no strife or confusion, and general good nature prevailed.

WILLARD COMES BACK

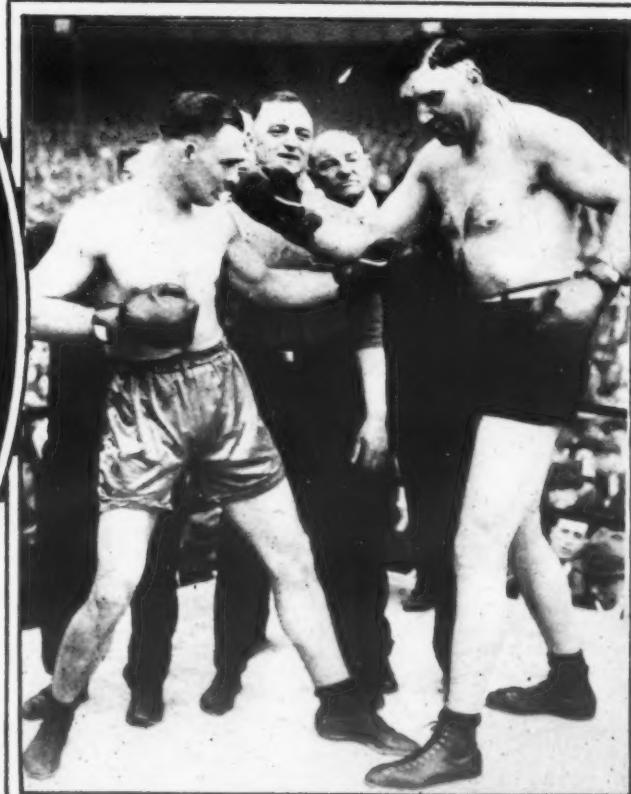

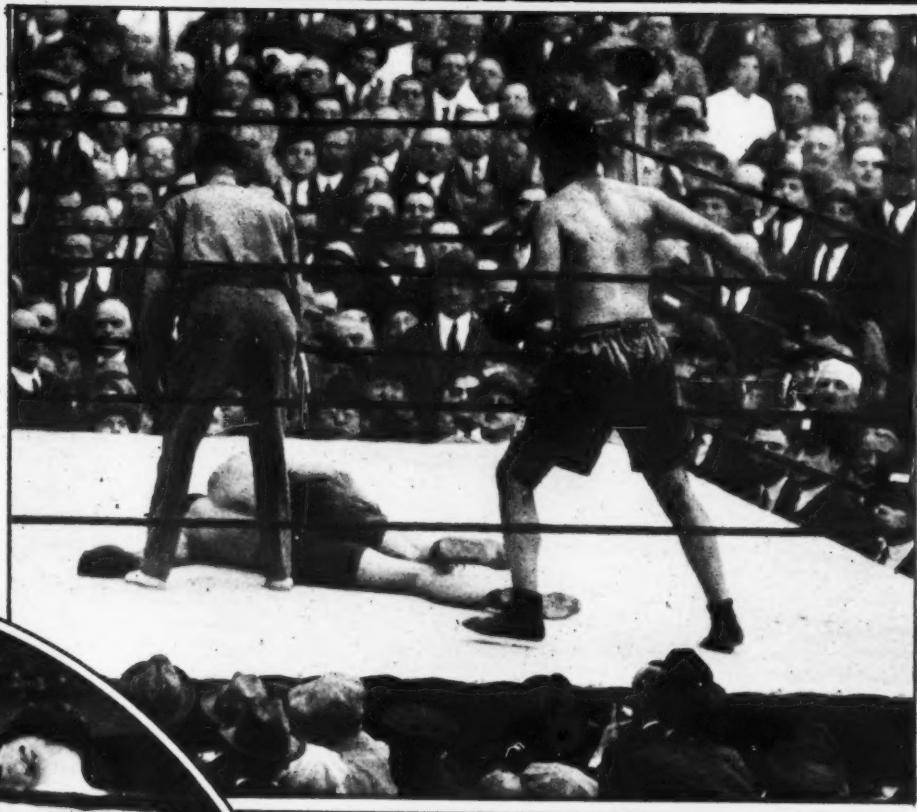

(Below.) Referee giving Willard the fight in the eleventh round after Floyd Johnson had been knocked down and was unable to continue. Johnson's seconds are seen coming toward him to carry him from the ring. The victory was recorded as a technical knockout. Willard won and upset the axiom that youth must be served simply because he enjoyed insurmountable advantages over a similar rival who lacked decisive punching ability. He weighed 248 pounds, while Johnson weighed

FIRPO KNOCKS OUT McAULIFFE

Climactic moment in the third round of the fight between Jack McAuliffe, the Detroit heavyweight boxer, who was knocked out by Luis Firpo, the Argentinian boxer. Firpo was less polished in his boxing ability and lacked the speed, skill, agility and cleverness of McAuliffe, but overcame these advantages of his rival by sheer strength alone.

Comfortable New Shoes for Pleasant Spring Days

when the whole world stretches out before you like a green carpet.

APPY Spring days, full of warmth, sunshine and activity!

On such days wouldn't you like to feel "foot-free," knowing no restraint, finding springy ease in every step as you refresh your spirits with wonderful walks under soft, sunny skies?

It is unnecessary to pamper your feet in old shoes at this glorious time of year. In new Cantilever Shoes you can walk with foot freedom and unusual comfort.

Cantilevers give you unusual comfort because they are built to act with the foot as well as to fit it. They have a flexible shank that curves up to follow the curve of your arch and support it without restricting its natural movement. This allows the muscles of your foot to strengthen through exercise so that they can perform their intended function of holding the bones of the foot in a springy, arched formation. The natural lines of Cantilever Shoes allow for ample toe room and the well-set low, medium or Cuban heel keeps your body healthfully and gracefully poised.

Cantilevers are made of light-weight, soft leathers in a number of attractive styles. They are in harmony with smart Spring costumes and are decidedly in vogue with that charming type of active woman who demands trim good looks as well as comfort in her footwear.

Every pair of Cantilevers is trademarked to protect you. Except in New York City and Chicago there is only one store in each town. If no Cantilever dealer in the list at the left is near you, write the manufacturers, Morse & Burt Co., 11 Carlton Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., for the name and address of one who is more conveniently located, and for a new booklet about feet and shoes.
